PARENTS AND CHILDREN
ADAPTING THROUGH THE DEPLOYMENT CYCLE

Vol 14 (2) - Your Preschooler
DEALING WITH INJURY

Seen and Unseen Wounds: When a Loved One is Injured

When service members return with seen or unseen injuries, all family members are affected. Children may need special preparation to understand and cope with the injury. A literal explanation of what to expect when children see a physically injured parent is important. For example, the term “lost limb” may lead young children to believe that the limb will be recovered. Children may be worried that parents will not be able to play with them or they might “catch” the injury. Reassurance is a key response. It may be wise to keep a first visit brief and ask them if they want a second visit. Children may be able to write letters or draw pictures to support their parent if a face to face visit is not possible.

Traumatic brain injury (TBI), an unseen injury, has been called the “signature injury” of recent conflicts. Even mild brain injuries, 90% of TBIs, can cause memory and thinking problems and affect how a person feels. Family members are often the first to notice changes. With more severe TBIs, families may experience grief and loss because the loved one is not the same person he/she used to be. Children may think they are to blame for an injured parent’s irritability or withdrawal. When possible, protect children from outbursts. Simple, concrete explanations for this behavior may help young children.

Teachers may be a good resource to tap into as they may see signs of distress in children before parents and schools may have links to local resources. Caregivers are often stretched thin caring for their wounded hero and providing extra support for children. Asking for help can be difficult, but caregivers also need support to cope.

Supporting Children after a Tragedy

When tragedy strikes close to home, we are left reeling, trying to understand. Children are especially vulnerable and need protection and reassurance. Here are a few tips to help children cope with tragedies:

- Give young children concrete, simple explanations of what happened. Let them know how it will affect them.
- Avoid graphic media coverage.
- Take cues from your child in discussing the event, and listen carefully to their feelings. If you feel overwhelmed with your own feelings, get some support for yourself before talking with your child.
- As much as possible maintain daily routines.
- Be patient with children who may be more whiny or clingy than usual. Children need to feel safe and reassured. Stay close to your children, who may want physical reassurance such as hugs or cuddling before bed.
- Children, like adults, may feel helpless after a tragedy. Help them find a way to do something meaningful to help others affected by loss.

Your Preschooler:

Reactions to trauma in preschoolers:
- Clinginess, fear of separation
- Tantrums, Irritability
- Regression to thumbsucking, bedwetting
- Difficulty sleeping

Parent Tips:

Snuggling close may provide needed quiet time. Here are some materials that may help young children process:

Elvin, The Elephant Who Forgets DVD
Heather Snyder, Ph.D., Susan Beebe, illustrator, and Bob Cluett, narrator

Sparrow
Dorinda Silver Williams
Resources for Families Dealing with Injury

Sesame workshop’s program “Talk, Listen, and Learn” addresses injury for a preschool audience.

Defense Centers of Excellence for Psychological Health and Traumatic Brain Injury
http://www.dcoe.health.mil/

The Wounded Warriors Project
http://www.wwphighcap.org/programs/family-support.aspx

The Veterans Crisis Line
http://veteranscrisisline.net/

“The Caring Bridge” is a support website for those with a loved one who is ill or injured.
http://www.caringbridge.org/

“Our Hero Handbook” was put together by spouses of injured service members
http://militarymedicineissues.info/on-line-resources/our_hero.htm

ADAPT is gearing up for the next wave of the project. You can help us better understand reintegration in military families and have a say in future resources and services provided to reintegrating military families!

If you live in Minnesota, are a parent of a 5-12 year old, and have been deployed (or your spouse/partner has been deployed) since 2001, we want to hear from you!

To learn more about the ADAPT project, go to www.cehd.umn.edu/fsos/adapt. For more information, you can call us at 612-624-4830 or e-mail us at adapt@umn.edu.

“Like” us on Facebook!
Follow us on Twitter @adaptmn!

Contact Information:
Dept. of Family Social Science
University of Minnesota
Rm. 290 McNH
1985 Buford Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55108
ADAPT@umn.edu
612-624-4830

Upcoming Topics Volume 15
Resilience in Military Families

http://www.cehd.umn.edu/fsos/adapt