ANNOTATION:

Data from the 1992 four state study (Umbreit and Coates, 1992) is presented along with comparable data from Canada (Umbreit, 1995) and England (Umbreit and Roberts, 1996) in an effort to begin to develop a cross-national picture of victim-offender mediation.

SATISFACTION: Across the four US, four Canadian, and two English sites, fairly high levels of victim satisfaction with victim-offender mediation were found. The results from England reflect less satisfaction than do those from the other two countries. One significant difference among the models is the use of indirect mediation in England.
