
NOT AVAILABLE ONLINE

ANNOTATION:

This is an evaluation of restorative justice programming through youth courts. Youth courts have gained in popularity over last decade and represent an alternative to traditional family court.

DESIGN: This study used a mixed-methodological approach. Courts were assessed by comparing three programs in South Carolina selected from the larger population of operational programs in the state. Several research questions were addressed, including the relationship between the implementation intensity of restorative principles and successful outcomes.